How to write Lamed

one stroke, from the top down

1 · One stroke
Start above the top line. Come down to it, go right along it, then slant down to the bottom left.

Good to know

Lamed is the tallest letter, the only one that reaches above the top line.

Hebrew is written from right to left, and a letter is drawn from the top down: the roof first, then the walls, then the floor. Every letter hangs from the top of the line — Lamed alone reaches above it — and Qof and four of the five final forms drop below it.

Practice

◀ Hebrew is written from right to left. Start each line at the green arrow and work toward the left.
